Raymond Smith, 18, a palefaced, shabbily dressed youth found in a hall-way at Lewis and Gates avenues, Brooklyn, told a story of a struggle against poverty and ill health in Gates Avenue Court yesterday that caused Magistrate Dale to send him to the "Up and In" Club on Middagh street for care. Smith's clothes were still wet from Sunday night's rainstorm when he was arraigned.

Smith said his father died in 1917, his brother in 1918 and his mother in 1918 and his mother in 1919. It took all the furniture and all of his clothes except those on his back to pay for his mother's funeral he said, and when the funeral was over and he are strong enough to hold a steady job. He got an occasional job washing dishes, and once some police chipped in hallways.

Warden Richard Wright of Raymond Street Jall, slipped $5 to a probation officer for Smith after he heard the story.
